BIBLE TEACHING

Let's continue to explore KF Confession 2:

We abandoned the glory that was ours, designed for us by our Creator.

When you find yourself in a time of endurance, you often feel fear. Courage is the ability to endure that fear while you make oriented choices. Your times of mindful endurance then become productive because whenever you endure your fear, you grow your courage, and this leads to more oriented outcomes. Courage is like a muscle; it is strengthened through exercising endurance in challenging situations. Developed courage is essential if you are to become a person of no fear. Here are two points that we might keep in mind:

1. Endurance requires long-tempered love

Endurance is not forever even though it may feel like it at times. We need endurance when we are in situations that examine our commitment, our trust, and our trustworthiness. Last week we learned about love being long-tempered rather than short-tempered. We are growing into long-tempered endurance that can resist compulsive reactions to those revealing and uncomfortable events—those life experiments, those days of judgment or examination. Your KF training gives you the choice to endure rather than to find yourself without choices; you can choose not to give in to the dictates of your fear because you have been training hard and learning to endure productively.

2. People differ in what they must learn to endure

Always remember with compassion that we differ in what we find hard to endure. What requires dogged endurance for one Idol type may be easy for another. Our job is to help each other, but we are not called to help each other indefinitely. Not even God will continue to support us if we persistently hesitate and waver in our obedience to Him and consistently choose the path of our Idol Self.

Let's return to our study of the letter from James. This is Nancy's translation of James 1:5–8.

⁵But if anyone should find themselves lacking practical skill in situations, let them ask God about it. God generously gives practical help to everyone, and He gives without throwing their dysfunction back in their faces to shame and belittle them. God will give wisdom to the one who asks for skill to deal with situations. ⁶But that person must ask in faith. In other words, they must be ready to act upon what God shows them without any hesitancy or wavering; for the one who wavers is like the surf of the sea, driven and tossed by the wind. ⁷Such persons ought not to imagine that they will receive anything from the Lord, ⁸being double-minded, or of two spirits, and therefore, unstable in all their ways.

Take a deep breath.

1. Double-minded people cannot receive guidance from God

We see in this passage that God is willing to give to everyone the wisdom they need to become accomplished, integrated, and fully equipped. Each time you fall into a trial or an experiment, you discover areas where you need wisdom. Discovering these areas is essential for your growth. God is always willing to teach you, but you can forfeit the benefit of His guidance by being double-minded and holding open the option to judge according to your own understanding. If you find yourself continually changing your mind or choosing misorientation, it means that you are still, as yet, without conviction. Either you need more training and healing, or you need a more thorough commitment. Every kingdom divided against itself will fall. 9 When you are acting out of neurosis, you are a divided kingdom. You vacillate between your allegiance to the Idol and your allegiance to love. You are not yet willing to take responsibility for how you perpetuate your suffering through your own choices and reactions. When your commitment wavers and is unstable, the Lord really cannot guide you to wisdom. Your house is built upon sand. 10 God would love to help you, but your pride stands in His way.

2. We have a choice as to how we will live

When we commit to learning how to live on the upper path, our lives really do become more peaceful, more loving, and more real. We also discover that we have more self-control. Just as we have been trained to default to the judgment path, we can retrain ourselves, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, to choose the path of love. You really can do it. The Bible says you can, and empirical research says you can.

Our second Bible reading for this lesson is Proverbs 3:5–7. You might look at this passage in the context of the whole chapter, which offers encouragement and all kinds of promises to those who choose to become single-minded and learn wisdom.

Here is Nancy's version of this text:

⁵Make sure that all your motivation begins with trust in God. Do not lean on your own understanding. ⁶In all your choices be mindful of Him and He will straighten your path toward oriented outcomes. ⁷Do not be wise in your own estimation; fear God and turn away from doing damage.

Take a deep breath.

The quality of your relationship with God is the result of your choices. If you choose to lean on your own understanding, being wise in your own estimation, and doing things your own way, you will stay on the lower path and disconnect yourself from God. But if you are mindful of God in your choices, you will remain on the upper path and will learn to trust God with all of your heart. Your greatest experiment in this world is to choose to live your life God's way and see what happens. Fear God by obeying Him as the Boss. Let Him make your path straight. Choose today whom you will serve. You really do have a choice. Trusting in His way of doing things is how godly choices are made.

Our prayer might go something like this:

Lord, in one area of my life this week, remind me to acknowledge

You as the Boss and to trust Your way of doing things. (Repeat)

Take a deep breath.

ENDING PRAYER

Dear Father and Creator,

We are grateful for this time together. Hold us in the power of this new direction as You guide us to our glory and to the truth. Lead us to the next step in our healing this week and reorient our lives to a more effective flow, to furthering our connection with our True Self, with our community, with the Creation, and with You, for the glory and honor of our Lord Jesus. Amen

Take a deep breath.
